

devoting exclusive attention to lighting glassware. It owns and operates two factories, one at Greenpoint, the other at Maspeth.

He was one of the organizers of the New York Sugar Refining Company, the works being located at Long Island City, and continued its Vice-President until its absorption into the National Sugar Refining Company.

The North Side Bank of Brooklyn for a few months occupied, when first organized, a portion of his store at Grand Street and Kent Avenue. He was one of the organizers of this bank, and is still (1910) a Director.

In 1888 he was chosen a Trustee of the Williamsburgh Savings Bank, the largest financial institution in Brooklyn, and in 1908 became one of its Vice-Presidents.

His religious interest, naturally, because of Dutch ancestry, has centered in the Greenpoint Reformed Church. For many years he was a teacher and Superintendent in its Sunday School, Superintendent of the Eagle Street Mission, Deacon, and is still an Elder. For thirty-five years he was Treasurer of the Church, which position is now held by Ralph H. Tiebout, his son.

While still a resident of Greenpoint he was prominently identified with the Republican organization.
