This battle torn infantry regiment standard had a place of honor in the great Bastile Day parade in Paris. The French never celebrated their Independence Day with greater enthusiasm. © Int. Film Serv.

These German police dogs held in leash by Mrs. C. Halstead Yates, president of the German Shepherd Dog Club of America, will soon be aiding in the rescue of wounded on the French front. © Underwood & Underwood

On the right one of Uncle Sam's great dreadnoughts is being coaled. The jackies usually wear white clothing when beginning this "pleasant" hot weather task, but——
© Underwood & Underwood

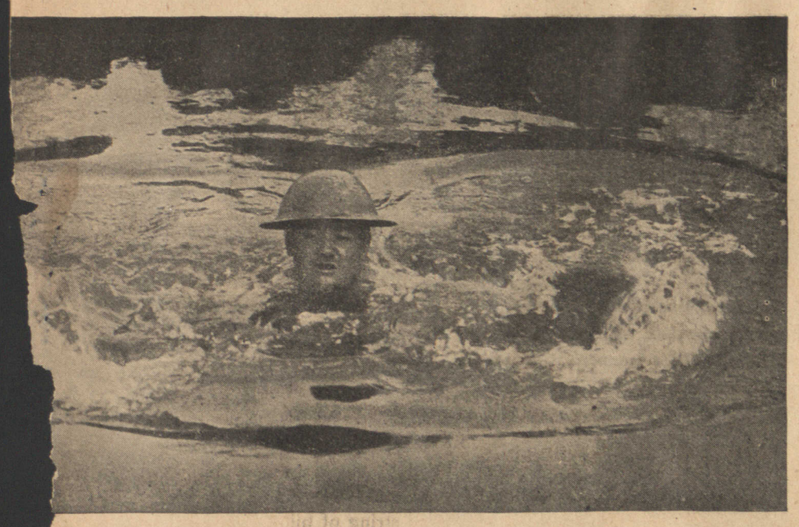
French women are aiding their country to rush the production of greatly needed aircraft. Here are a couple working on an observation balloon. They are sewing ropes that hold the car to the gas bag.
French Official from Pictorial Press



One of the lumbering British tanks, well camouflaged, rests a moment with the Tommies on the Western front.
© Underwood & Underwood

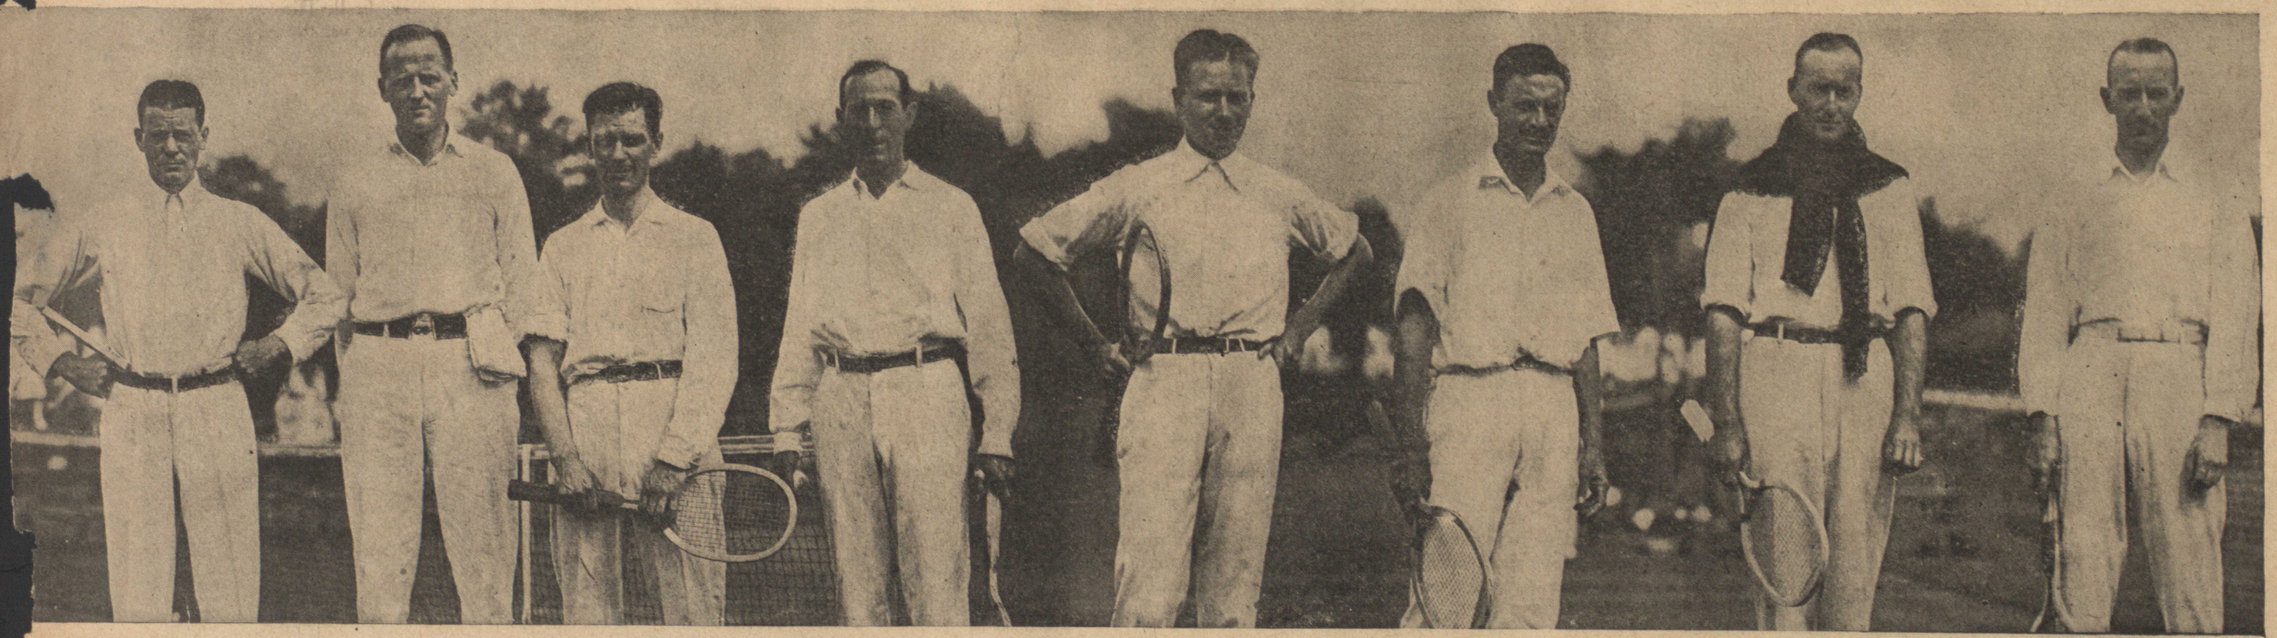
This Canadian trooper is cooling himself by a swim in a great shell hole behind the Canadian lines.
Canadian Off. Photo from Am. Press Assn.



Eight American tennis cracks lined up on the courts at the recent Seabright (N. J.) tournament. Do you know them all? Left to right: Nathaniel W. Niles, Lyle E. Mahan, Karl H. Behr, Frederick C. Inman, Elliott C. Binzen, Frederick B. Alexander, Theodore Roosevelt Pell and B. S. Prentice.
Paul Thompson