

After nearly 150 years of separation, England and the United States gave the first concrete proof of final unity when cheering thousands of Britishers welcomed Our Boys in Khaki as they marched through the streets of London in the stirring demonstration of August 15. The above picture shows the U. S. troops marching through Trafalgar Square, London "Bobbies" have given the wounded "Tommy's" vantage points to view the parade.

Central News.

"Hats off to the Star Spangled Banner!" was the Londoners' cry all along the line of march as the color guard of the contingent went past.

Underwood & Underwood.

When Our Boys marched at "route step" all formality was forgotten, and they had a hand shake, a smile, or a cheery remark for everyone along the line.

Int. Film.

On the left — King George and Queen Alexandra reviewing the American contingent from in front of Buckingham Palace. "Eyes Left!" has just been given, and Our Boys get a good "close-up" of their Royal Majesties.

Underwood & Underwood.