

Russia's Premier, Kerensky, in a serious mood, consulting a map in the compartment of a railway coach carrying him on one of his recent hurried trips out of Petrograd.

A flashlight of Billy and Ma Sunday with a group of their friends, just before starting off on a Georgia 'possum hunt.

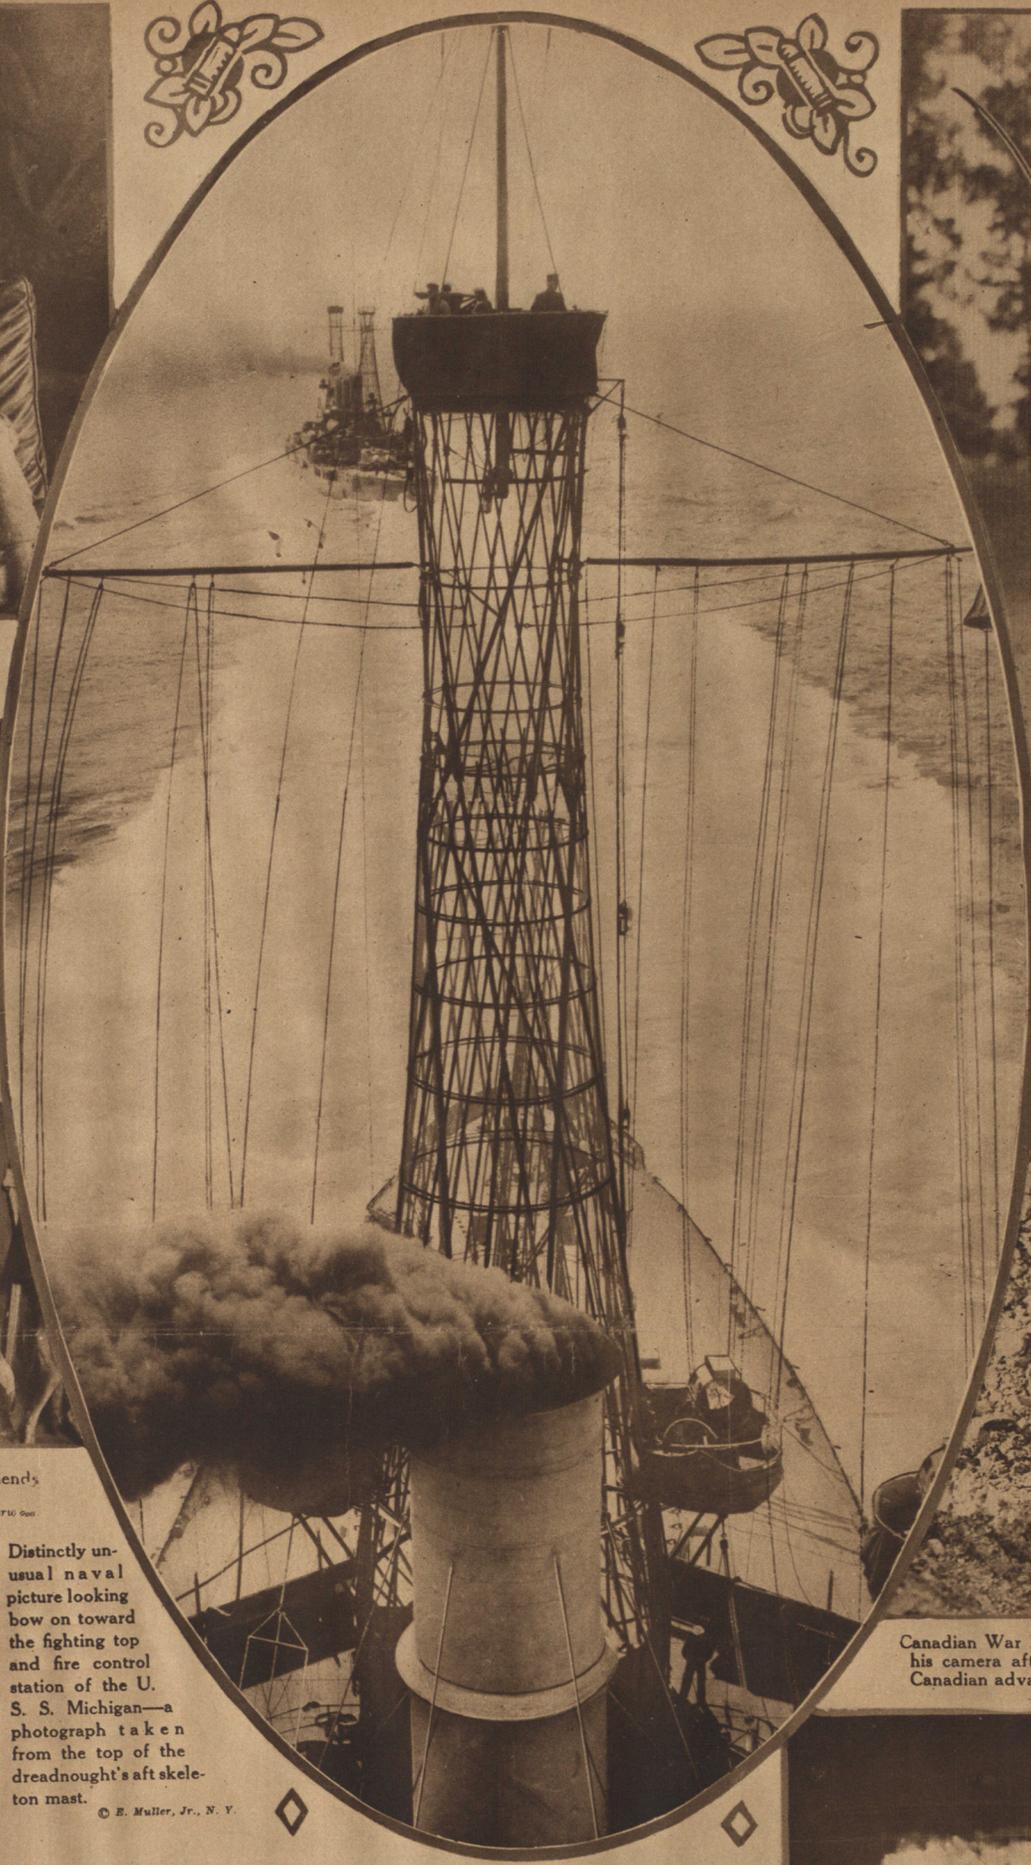

Distinctly unusual naval picture looking bow on toward the fighting top and fire control station of the U. S. S. Michigan—a photograph taken from the top of the dreadnought's aft skeleton mast.

On the left, a completely equipped United States doughboy—rifle, bayonet, blanket roll, mess kit and all the up-to-date equipment of a modern soldier make a man-sized load.

The 6th Field Artillery at Fort Myer, Va., wearing their new steel helmets, indulging in a practice charge over and through the underbrush entanglement.

Looking out from the ammunition supply dug out at one of Uncle Sam's 3-inch guns camouflaged beneath a straw canopy.

"Charge!" A striking photograph of one of Uncle Sam's cavalymen going to it at one of our training camps. It is the thrill of such action as this that makes so many of our boys select the cavalry branch of the service.

Canadian War Department photographer, wearing his gas mask fore and his camera aft, discovers a boche half buried by shell fire during the Canadian advance on Hill 70.
