

Above — Broadway and Forty-second Street duplicated at Camp Wadsworth, where our boys of the Guard are training. Two of the lads, thinking of home, get what consolation they can from leaning against New York's busiest corner.

Right—For the boys in the trenches, American beef being unloaded from a French freight car under the supervision of an inspecting officer.

Above—The first snow of the season ushered in Thanksgiving Day at Camp Meade. Many of the men enjoyed leave, and, as here in New York, had their Thanksgiving dinner as the guests of near-by patriotic families.

Right—After several destructive incendiary fires barred zones have been established along the waterfront and around certain buildings in New York. The soldier is examining passes of workmen who wish to enter one of these zones.

Left—Field Artillery Battery B, 105, at target practice with a 4.7 gun. Snap and precision mark the work of the gunners, and every shell rammed into the gun and every movement indicate a warm greeting for Fritz.

For more reasons than one we hope these bearded U. S. Navy gunners can shave soon! Stationed on a transatlantic steamer, they have vowed not to trim up until they have fought and sunk a U-boat.
